

REPORT TO PARENTS

Dear Parents:

You are your child’s first teacher and you play a major role in your child’s academic success.

Parents impact their child’s educational successes by being involved in a variety of ways. Two of the most important things you can do are communicate with your student’s teacher and school on a regular basis and support your student’s learning at home. Communication could be something as simple as speaking with or sending notes to your child’s teacher regularly to see how he/she is doing or by attending school events and meetings where you can interact with your child’s classmates, teachers, and school staff. Activities that support your student’s learning include checking your child’s homework to make sure it is completed and/or helping your child get needed homework help through a Homework Hotline, after school tutoring, or other sources.

The following shows how your student is doing in areas that have been known to help children be successful in school. Please use the boxes below to provide any information or comments:
